The importance of the study: Success in organizations, financial and physical resources, is the result of the integration of appropriate human resources. Developing organizations flourish not only with the development of financial and physical resources, but also they are aware that, improvement of human resources, by motivating workers, is important to succeed (Brown, 2003, 31). As it can boost the production by performance of employees, it can also limit the production. This feature of the human factor has brought the need to motivate people to work (Bowen & Radhakrishna, 1991). Today, in addition to attract people to work with, organizations are experiencing difficulties in retaining people within the organization. This factor has brought the need to satisfy people with their jobs.

Job satisfaction is very important for the continuity of a business. A high level of employees' job satisfaction increases the efficiency with organizational commitment. The employees work efficiently and effectively within the organization when they feel a large extent of job satisfaction. Therefore the organizations should put an effort to improve the factors that affect the job satisfaction of employees [1] [2].

DEFINITIONS

Various researchers defined motivation as: an internal drive to satisfy an unsatisfied need [3]; and the will to achieve [4]. For this study, motivation is defined as the inner force that pushes individuals to achieve organizational goals.

Many researchers have defined job satisfaction as: the pleasurable emotional state resulting from the appraisal of one’s job as achieving or facilitating the achievement of one’s job values [5]; and the extent to which people like or dislike their jobs [6].

MOTIVATION AND JOB SATISFACTION

Motivation was seen as a dynamic concept by Maslow. According to him, the concept of motivation involves changing both social and personality variables in Hierarchy of Needs model; people are motivated to meet five levels of needs: physiological, safety, social, self-esteem and self-actualization needs [7]. For instance, humans work to get money and to meet physiological needs such as food and house. People work to have a sense of security, knowing that at the end of each month they will receive their salary that will enable them to live as securely as before. Some people may enjoy working because it provides them a social environment where they could network and deal with other people. In so doing, their social needs are fulfilled. People’s esteem needs may be fulfilled when they receive respect and recognition for their work; and for some very lucky people, their self-actualization needs may be met by them doing work that they really enjoy and excel at. Employee’s persistence, productivity and performance are influence by motivation [8], [9]. Motivated employees are more loyal with their work and organization as compare to less motivate [10], which shows motivated employees will be more responsible development opportunities offered. Motivated employees show more commitment with the jobs [11]; They do more struggle to achieve the organization goals as compare to low motivated employees.

There is a positive relationship between job satisfaction and life satisfaction. If People, who spend a significant portion of their lives in the work environment, are happy with their jobs, it makes positive contribution to their life satisfaction [12]. In this context, a staff with high power of job satisfaction provides a positive contribution to the state in terms of the macro and micro in organizations. The benefits of micro and macro context of job satisfaction are lined up as follows:
